Story of a Novelist. Lynne," the "best seller" of its generation, was forty and a wife and mothwriting, and her most famous book seems to have been written to soothe the weariness of a severe illness. Much the writer scarcely hoped to live to complete it. After running an obscure course in a monthly magazine the story was refused by several publishers and accepted only with considerable misgivings by Richard Bentley. It fell flat until some one reviewed it enthusiastically in the London Times, and then the printers worked night and day to cope with the demand. Within a very short time "East Lynne" was translated into almost every language in Europe, and as book
